Sunday Morning

Orange Juice

The Lone Palms' slow progression into a coup of distorted guitars, thunderous bass and heavy-hitting drums began as a quiet, two guitar acoustic project in the wetlands of Vancouver, Canada. Motivated to get back in front of an audience, Alex Cooper and Dave Comrie began an enterprise to cover acoustic rock focused on the sounds of pioneers America and The Eagles. They soon realized they should supplement their evolving original music with the addition of more voices, bass, drums and electricity. Enter pals Dan Cerino (slaps) and Stacy Mack (skins). More than keen to add a booming foundation for the Palms' updated sound, they seamlessly weave grunge, psychedelic and indie rock together in an effort as spirited and rugged as the city they reside in.

The Lone Palms are currently planning on recording a follow-up to 2019's debut EP "Fun & Games" at Echoplant Recording Studios with producer Matt Di Pomponio for a release in Fall 2020. This past April saw them pay tribute to Zamrock legends Amanaz in the form of a brand new live video entitled "Sunday Morning" released on YouTube and the band's website, thelonepalms.com. The video was recorded live at The Ranch in the Mount Pleasant area of East Vancouver last October and features the band in a caffeine-induced bliss.

The debut EP "Fun & Games" was recorded over some months in 2018-2019 with Nimbus School of Recording & Media bud and engineer Ricardo Germain at the Armoury Studios, and was released independently track-by-track on Spotify and other major streaming platforms. The offering garnered the band positive reviews from music blogs around North America and from their online and local fanbase.

"Like a fresh breeze of combined ol' school rock and grunge-Americana, The Lone Palms bring a third dimension of new-wave in the edges of a unique blend of song."

"They are inspired by everything from Zamrock to dad rock yet their sound remains completely fresh. Be sure to check out this rare, fine thing: a musical gumbo of grit, talent and emotion - tied up in a bow of enthusiasm and love for the world of sound."
